ROBERT RABBIT'S ROBOT

MRS. RABBIT neatly tied a white napkin around her son's neck. Then she gently pinned his two long ears back with a clothes pin, explaining. "That's so your floppy ears won't flop in your dish and get all messy."

She went to the stove and placed a dish on the table in front of him.

"What's this?" asked Robert Rabbit.

"Carrot stew," said Mrs. Rabbit.

"Don't want any," said little Robert, peevishly.

"Of course, you do," said Mrs. Rabbit. "It's very good. You'll love it." She dipped into the bowl with a spoon, ate some herself, smacked her lips and said, "Yum, yum!"

"You eat it, Mom, if you like it," suggested Robert.

"No, son. I made it just for you," declared his mother. "You try it and you'll like it. Carrot stew is what makes little bunnies grow up to be big, strong, manly bunnies. And it's good for your eyes. Makes you see in the dark."

"Don't want to see in the dark," declared Robert. "I'm not old enough to drive a car, and besides I'm scared of the dark. Dark is the time for sleeping, not seeing."

Mrs. Rabbit ran a hand across her wrinkled brow and looked worried.

"I want to eat bones and get to be as big and strong as Georgy, the Collie Dog," said Robert Rabbit.

His mother opened her mouth to speak, but just at that very moment, Mr. Rabbit, Robert's father, came through the door. He was just getting home after a hard day's work at the lettuce factory.

"What's this? You want to eat bones?" he exclaimed.

"Yes, sir," said Robert.

"I don't know what to do with him," declared Mrs. Rabbit, sadly. "He just won't eat his carrots. I . . ."

Her husband beckoned to her, and she followed him out of the room. They talked in low tones.

"I suppose we could force him to eat the carrots," she said.

"No, it would be wrong to force him," Mr. Rabbit pointed out. "I have just read a book entitled How to Raise Baby Bunnies, by Prof. Hare-Brain. It says it's poor psychology to force a child to eat anything he doesn't want to eat."

"But whatever shall we do?" asked Robert's mother.

"He wants to eat bones like a dog," said Robert's father. "So we'll give him bones."

"Oh, goodness!" exclaimed Mrs. Rabbit.

"It's all right," said Mr. Rabbit. "As soon as he finds out how terrible bones taste, he'll be glad to eat his carrot stew without complaining." So they gave Robert a nice big bone for supper.

HE nibbled at it and said, "Yum, yum!" You'd have laughed to see this little bunny sitting at the table with his floppy ears pinned back by a clothes pin, nibbling at a big soup bone and saying, "Yum, yum!"

Truth to tell, Robert didn't like the bone very much. It had a dull, dry taste. It was hard to get much out of it. But he had a stubborn streak, as a lot of children have. He wasn't going to admit that he had been wrong about wanting a bone. Georgy, the Collie Dog, seemed to enjoy them but he didn't. But he kept on nibbling bones at breakfast, lunch and supper. And a strange thing happened.

One morning he went out to play ball with the other bunny children. Robert the Rabbit started to yell, "Hey, Lippy, throw me the ball." But his voice wasn't a bunny voice any more. It was a dog voice. It growled and barked. And all the other bunny children ran away, scared, and none of them would play with Robert any more.

Robert was sorry they wouldn't play, but he was thrilled by his new voice. He thought, "Now I can go play with Georgy, the Collie Dog." He hopped up to Georgy's dog house.

"Come on, let's play a game of catch!" said Robert.

"Go away, small fry," growled Georgy. "I don't play games with rabbits. You'd better not bother me or I'll bite you in two!"

Robert was frightened by the gruff tone, and he hopped away as fast as he could. He was a lonely little bunny. The other bunnies wouldn't play with him and neither would Georgy.

HOWEVER, Robert was resourceful. He went into his Daddy's workshop where his Dad had been building a television set. Robert found a lot of wires and batteries, and a little motor and nails, and wood and metal, and just about everything you need to build anything.

So he put a lot of stuff together and made a robot rabbit, or, you might say, a mechanical rabbit. This mechanical rabbit was no bigger than Robert, himself, but as it was made mostly of steel, it was very strong. After it was built, Robert decided it ought to have a name, so he chose one at random. He called his robot Frank N. Stine.

"Frank," he said, "come on out and let's have a game of catch."

The robot obeyed his master, and they went out of the workshop and began tossing a ball back and forth. Because his hands were made of metal and he couldn't feel any sting, Frank didn't care how fast Robert sent the balls in.

"You've got a good fast ball," said Frank. "I'll call you Rapid Robert, feller."

Robert was so pleased with the compliment that he tried to throw one even harder than ever. It was a wild pitch. It went high over Frank's head and bounced against the side of Georgy's dog house.

Georgy was angry. He picked up the ball. Frank went after it.

"That's our ball. Give it back, please," said Frank.

"I will not," exclaimed Georgy, gruffly. "I'll keep it."

"I'll take it away from you," said the robot rabbit, moving closer.

"I'll bite you in half!" growled Georgy. He bit.

He yowled.

His teeth could do nothing against the steel of Frank's body. Then Frank hauled off and punched Georgy in the side of the jaw. Georgy fled for shelter inside his dog house, leaving the ball behind.

"Oh, boy, you're wonderful!" said Robert to Frank. His eyes shone as he admired his new idol.

Mr. and Mrs. Rabbit had been watching all this from a distance.

"I'm still worried that Robert won't eat his carrots," said Mrs. Rabbit.

"Don't worry," grinned Mr. Rabbit. "I think we can fix that."

Now you must admit that Mr. Rabbit had to be pretty smart and clever himself to have a smart and clever son like Robert Rabbit who invented a robot rabbit. That night when Robert was asleep his father quietly took Frank, the mechanical rabbit, and made a few slight adjustments. In fact, he changed one doojigger and put in a new thingumabob.

NEXT morning, when Robert came to breakfast, he was surprised to see Frank, the robot, already sitting at the table and eating a carrot stew for all he was worth.

"You like that stuff?" asked Robert.

"Yum yum!" replied Frank.

So Robert asked for a bowlful himself — sheepishly, if a rabbit may be said to be sheepish. And today, Robert Rabbit is very strong and healthy — whenever younger bunnies ask him for advice, he says, "The best thing is to eat what your mama sets before you. She knows best."

C'MON, FOLLOW ME, COBINA!

SUNDAY—Dear Diary—Master Jimmy had a swell dinner today—I saw him eat everything from soup to nuts—for a change he used me & ran after him all evening.

LET'S TAKE A MUD BATH, COBINA!

MONDAY—Dear Diary—The Master took me walking in rainy—but he didn't mind—he found the mudiest places to go into—oh, well, a dog's best friend is her mudder!

GO GET IT, COBINA!

TUESDAY—Dear Diary—It stumps me where he gets all his stamina—he keeps throwing sticks for me to retrieve!

DING! DONG!

GOLLY, I'M LATE AGAIN THIS MORNING!

WEDNESDAY—Dear Diary—My Master must love going to school—he runs there every morning.

THURSDAY—Dear Diary—He raided the cupboard and ate half a jar of jam today with the other half he got all over the walls etc., now I know what people mean when they say they're in a jam.

FRIDAY—Dear Diary

Aww! Aww!

SATURDAY—Dear Diary—Master Jimmy is spending the week-end with me—Tak! Tak!
